

FILMPRODUCTION GOGOL LOBMAYR

THE FASCINATING NATURE
&
WONDERFUL WORLD
TRILOGY

The idea was to create a cinematic masterpiece about the Most beautiful Landscapes of the world – about the Colors of the Earth and about the Seven Seasons of the year – in order to transport people in the theatre for a few hours away from the hard grays of daily life to a colorful world of nature filled with wonders.

Enchanting images beamed on the big screen with especially composed music performed by the MDR Symphony Orchestra in the Bethanien Church in Leipzig.
No commentary interrupts this symbiotic harmony of sight and sound.

Gogol Lobmayr developed the idea himself, inventing new cinematic techniques, directing and producing it personally, financed out of his pocket, without co-producers or any funding from public subsidies.

The most advanced film quality available is always a priority for Gogol Lobmayr.
Everything was filmed on 35mm, specifically Super 35mm FUJI Film.
Transferred to HD. Released on Analog Film and HDDigital.

FASCINATING NATURE I - still the most successful German theatrical film of its kind today.

FASCINATING NATURE II - developed for planetariums with live performances by various artists with laser, fog and special effects to create unforgettable images for engineered presentations in a fantastic 360-degree surround-sound enhanced shows.

FASCINATING NATURE III - screened in almost every Cineplex and presented – along with SONY and BMW - as the first digital cinema projection in Munich's renowned Mathäser Cinema.

These three productions were created during an eleven-year period for the primary target market - 6 to 66 year olds.

For the nature, hiking and adventure travel enthusiast, the esoteric public and family market, as well as the technically curious.

Along with that, marketing and instructional films were developed for the cosmetics, technology, food and travel industries, including tourism agencies around the world.
